

pulver.com filed a petition with the FCC on behalf of Free World Dialup, asking for a Declaratory Ruling that states that Broadband Internet Telephony, which doesn't touch the public switched telephone network (PSTN), should not be ruled as either "Telecommunications" or as a "Telecommunications Service" as defined by the Telecom Act of 1996.

I agree with this petition, there needs to be a separation of internet and physical business. If phone companies are able to monopolize, how will competition arise? The VOIP companies will be beneficial to the consumer leading to lower rates. I am currently a customer of a VOIP company, and enjoy the freedom to choose and save money.
